

Capitalism, Free Trade, & Socialism

Why our failing economy is opening the “door” for Socialism

With jobs now being the number one issue for most Americans, we need to take a close look at why the U.S. has lost millions of jobs in recent years. Today, progressives are claiming that capitalism has failed as evidenced by the millions of lost jobs, and that we need to switch over to socialism to save our economy. The average voter is unaware that socialism has failed everywhere that it has been tried, they just know that under today’s version of capitalism jobs are a big problem.

The suffering economy that we are experiencing has not been caused by a failure of capitalism. Capitalism has been the “engine” of building the U.S. economy into the greatest economy that the world has ever seen. The root cause of our suffering economy has been the sending of millions of manufacturing jobs overseas over the last 30 years. This has been happening because of the unfair competition from low-cost foreign imports that has been brought in by our government’s free trade policies.

As long as we continue trying to make free trade work we will continue experiencing the decline in our economy. As long as our economy continues to decline the progressives will be promoting the idea that socialism is the answer.

Isn’t it time that we take the free trade imposed competitiveness burden off of U.S. manufacturers and permit capitalism to really work again? We need to do this before the Democrats are able to impose socialism on our great nation.

Summary

We need to take a serious look at the rather simple trade policy concept that Japan used following WW II to permit their manufacturers to rebuild after the war? This policy worked very well for them and the essence of it would work very well for the U.S. today. This new trade policy would permit the U.S. to unilaterally eliminate all tariffs, create a truly level playing field for U.S. manufacturers, significantly increase government tax revenues, increase U.S. exports, and create the biggest economic boom that our nation has ever seen, all without the need for any government stimulus money.

Contact the New Hope for America Foundation or check out the videos on our website, www.newhopeforamerica.org to find out more about this effective new trade policy concept.